The Top 10

These blogs are the best of the best when it comes to user-centered discussions.

1. Signal vs. Noise: Written by 37signals, the makers of simple, elegant tools like Ta-da List and Basecamp, this blog discusses up-to-the-minute information on design, experience, simplicity, and more.
2. 456 Berea Street: Visit this very popular blog for insight into the world of web standards, accessibility, and usability.
3. ./with Imagination: As a leader in user interface engineering, Dustin Diaz has a lot of knowledge to offer in this arena.
4. Functioning Form: Luke Wroblewski's Functioning Form offers extensive information on user interface design.
5. This is Broken: This is Broken features a round-up and commentary on user experiences, good and bad.
6. Adaptive Path: Adaptive Path strives to create experiences that "improve people's lives," and they love to share what they've learned with others.
7. Boxes and Arrows: The subject matter focuses on interaction design and other closely related topics, but this blog sets an example because it's a peer-written journal composed of mainly user-generated content.
8. A List Apart: A List Apart's insightful articles cover important issues in design and development with an emphasis on web standards.
9. UX Matters: This web magazine delivers top-notch content about strategies for improving user experience.
10. UX Magazine: For this magazine, "user experience is everything." Check it out for a round-up of all that's important to enhancing user experience.
